If you've ever wanted to use your Chromebook's built-in microphone to control your tunes, you're in luck: Google's Play Music app for Chrome OS is getting a whole new Android-powered assistant called Google Assistant, in the form of an app update. In simple terms, you can use Google Assistant in the Play Music app to make and receive calls and to make purchases through Google Play. Of course, you'll also be able to use the assistant for some other functions, like answering questions, listening to music and more. Google Assistant is similar to Amazon's Alexa-powered Echo speaker, with a somewhat limited functionality. To access Google Assistant, you'll need to first enable the feature in the Play Music app. To do so, tap the menu icon in the top right corner of the app, tap on the cogwheel icon, then tap on "Add Assistant." Once you've done that, you'll need to go to Settings and enable Google Assistant for all accounts. You can even enable Google Assistant for your whole Google account to make it available on all of your devices. Finally, you'll need to be within 3 feet of a device running Android 5.0 or later to use Google Assistant. For audio-related queries, you'll need to be within 2 meters of your Google Play Music app. There's no word yet on when Google Assistant will make its way to other Google apps, such as Gmail. In the meantime, if you want to call or text someone using your Chromebook, the best bet is probably to pick up a Google Pixelbook, which has the Assistant built-in. If you want to use the assistant to make purchases using Google Play, you'll need to upgrade to a Chromebook Pixel from 2015 or earlier, which has built-in Google Pay support. Have you ever tried signing into your bank accounts on your smartphone? Most likely, the app you're using to do so is the one that your smartphone came with, and if you've been using it for more than a few years, you've probably had to upgrade to the latest version. The bank app you use on your smartphone, most likely, needs to be updated to the latest version of Android, and you may be wondering why this is so. It's not always clear why one update over another is made, but
