Treatment of cardiac sarcoplasmic reticulum (SR) vesicles with troponin C in the presence of Ca2+ activates the Ca2+ ATPase (Nishizaki, S. (1982) FEBS Lett. 144, 165-168). This effect was shown to be dependent on calmodulin by using two independent methods: (1) The activation of the Ca2+ ATPase by troponin C in Ca2+/calmodulin-containing SR was abolished by addition of a Ca2+/calmodulin antagonist, W-7, and by preincubation of the SR with calmodulin, and (2) The high affinity Ca2+ ATPase activity was increased after exposure of the SR to calmodulin. The increase of ATPase activity was observed in the presence of Ca2+, Mg2+, and phospholipids. The presence of calmodulin in the SR was also demonstrated by the presence of two endogenous peptides which could be cross-linked to calmodulin. These peptides were either identical or closely related to the known calmodulin-binding peptides of myofibrils. We conclude that Ca2+/calmodulin-dependent activation of the Ca
