I can't believe it!) and to play a bunch of other games, mostly for test purposes, but there was one game that I noticed a second before I played it was one that I had picked up on Kickstarter, and it's called Goblin Game. If you've never heard of them, they're a very small (2-3 people, two of which are often game designers), indie developer from the Netherlands. The game is a combination of tower defense and card game (specifically, win or lose, you gain a card or coins for the game). On the one hand, I loved the game. I really, really enjoyed playing and finding the optimal way to win, but on the other hand, the gameplay felt a little repetitive. You had some over-powered spells and creatures to spam, you could have a whole team of them, but really, you were just going to win or lose, and there was no real strategy other than making sure you had enough cards to spam. I didn't feel like that strategic strategy was in there, and I kind of wanted more of that, especially as I played it on Facebook and it seemed like I wasn't really in control of the card packs I was using. The game itself is a good game. I enjoy the art style, the cute little card art, and there's just a lovely soundtrack that fits well. But there was a bit more to the game I wanted. I wanted some real strategy in there, because if I'm going to play something, I don't just want to win or lose. I want to learn something from it. I want to explore

Search for vibrational modes and prebiotic chemistry in a porous single-wall carbon nanotube. Few-to-a-few isolated one-dimensional materials provide unique opportunities for more detailed studies of their properties than matrix-supported two-dimensional materials such as graphene or single-walled carbon nanotubes. In this work, we use a combination of infrared spectroscopy and quantum calculations to explore quantum confinement in a single-wall carbon nanotube supported on a porous metal-organic framework. A vibrational study of the toroid-shaped tube demonstrates remarkable spectral selectivity and changes in the band intensities in response to changes in the nanotube diameter. The enhanced signal in the infrared spectra is consistent with the experimental assignment. This is part of an ongoing systematic study of the electronic, optical, and vibrational properties of porous materials. Although the nanotube diameter changes on the order of 10%, measurable mass changes are also observed. This suggests the potential use of molecular-scale quantum confinement to identify analytically discriminating signatures of individual species in a mixture. The finding is also of potential biological interest as pulsed laser induced Raman enhancements are ubiquitous in biology, and our results suggest that such enhancements may also result from the quantum confinement imposed by porous silica in the primitive steps of life.

! Wizards! Watchers! The world seems to be built like a game of mall-opoly! In just a few short weeks, more than 100 million people will gather for the fifth iteration of the most popular global festival of fantasy and science fiction: The 2016 World Science Fiction Convention. Europe will be the main draw, with the GallifreyOne convention center being a particular favorite location on the continent. After the initial announcement of the con, attendees can check out the full schedule, which includes a special party called the “Titans Tournament” for longtime friends of the convention and guests who are hardcore geeks. Each player will bring their own favorite character or idea (Titans) to the party, which takes place just a short stroll away from the main convention hall. We’ve compiled this list of 16 cosplayers from the past few seasons who’ve already competed in either the tabletop or video-game-related divisions of the convention. Plus we’ve included cosplay blog favorites and fellow journalists from across the globe! For those who’ve been out of the convention scene, odds are very good they’ve heard the name “Kelly Fisher.” The talented cosplayer has dressed up as Marvel’s Black Cat ever since 2009, and has appeared as a regular at Comic-Con. She’s garnered numerous awards for her Spider-Man costume (along with the most impressive eyes in the known universe) and even bared her impressive figure (bare-chested) for Marvel’s Avengers: Age of Ultron convention panel! We would also be remiss to not include Kelly and this amazingly gorgeous Charizard or even this spectacularly realistic Dragon. Female cosplay fans, you just may want to pick up Kelly’s work! Lance’s cosplay history dates back to 2011, when he began the character head-start on a Marvel Alpha Flight costume. Now Lance is one of the most popular cosplayers at the convention. Much of his fan base goes with him to Titanfall 2 where he is a top-ranked Soldier. Artist Maggie is a fun and funny writer of comedic YouTube videos who dons the Star-Lord costume ‘n’ face for the wacky new Guardians of the Galaxy movie. She's also been sharing her unique artistic talents with her own characters, and we can't thank her enough for her amazing tireless work!
