The role of p53 in providing an indication of high-risk human papillomavirus (HPV) in undetermined smears of cervicovaginal cytology is still unclear. A systematic review of the literature from Medline, Cochrane and Embase (1996-2006) was performed and a further search was performed for abstracts that were not represented in the search strategy. Only two of nine studies included in the original review had provided data that were usable for meta-analysis. The high heterogeneity of the included studies, suggested that a meta-analysis was not possible. In a meta-analysis from the published literature, the overall sensitivity and specificity of the presence of p53 in high-risk HPV DNA-positive specimens was 62% and 90%, respectively. Our observations were consistent with the published data. The sensitivity and specificity of p53 in HPV-negative and high-risk HPV-negative specimens were 77% and 94%, and 72% and 95%, respectively. The positive predictive value was 95% and negative predictive value was 56%. The use of p53 in these pap test on Papanicolaou thin smears from residual material may be useful for triage of women with atypical squamous cells on Papanicolaou test, when the HPV test is not available. The problem for Belarus and Vladimir Putin and the illegal occupation is this: With the Russian economy crashing, like most of the West, the Minsk regime has no real source of income. The ruble has collapsed and the money from oil has dried up. The main source of income is the European Union, which is now turning off the taps and cutting Belarus off from crucial

Western technology and critical medical supplies. Russia is a major exporter of

Manikka and Sumiran arrested by Chennai police
The Chennai police on Thursday arrested seven members of the Tamil Nadu Hijra community and another four on suspicion of running a prostitution ring. The seven were arrested in north Chennai, sources said. The Chennai police are conducting raids in the districts of Virudhunagar, Tiruvallur, Guduvancheri, Ariyalur and Nilgiris to arrest another three. The arrests of seven and raids on five suspected cases were ordered on the directions of the Controller of Customs after it was found that there was a nexus between the transgender community and the drug culture, police sources said. Wednesday, June 14, 2016 A First for WONCA At EPN2016, I attended a session given by Dr. Diane Cowen of WONCA. She was speaking about the barriers to involvement in WONCA, who now has over 300 member countries and national associations. She went on to give an excellent overview of working through multi-national groups for events and workshops - these were the part of this seminar that I found particularly challenging. You can see there are many potential barriers to involvement in an international organization. Things like finance, time, language, and national politics may make this more difficult. While money, time, and language are, in fact, financial and geographical concerns we may face, they are also assumptions that come from our own narratives. They might look at why it is so difficult to hold a WONCA International meeting here and so decide that an invitation to attend is not forthcoming. One third of our Council members are from North America and the USA but we already offer an excellent annual meeting in the USA. I checked those statistics while I waited for my session and they are quite telling. (And possibly inadvertant - maybe most of our 790 member nations are relatively small and new and therefore don't yet occupy an office outside their own countries; they may live in communities that are still too small for a national association and don't recognize their need for an organization until their country grows sufficiently. Of course it's also entirely possible that our 300 countries are dispersed over a very large area and an invitation to an international meeting is anything but straightforward.) The time issue is one I really know a lot about. It's gotten a lot easier for me with my ability to use Skype and find the best possible Internet connection, but I can see how this becomes a huge problem for many delegates. They may have a great PowerPoint presentation and be able to explain every single issue, but then when they sit down for their seven-minute presentation it's not long before it begins to feel like they're running on rails with no opportunity for questions or acknowledgement of issues they've not had a chance to explain. Yes, I'm pretty sure the first time I heard about WONCA, I knew virtually nothing about it so it was easy to come up with an explanation of what WONCA is. It was a workable explanation. But most people don't come from that background. Furthermore, it's very, very

Will Smith believes being racist is a 'big deal' to his fans and it fuels more hate in the world. The actor, who has built an astounding comedy career around playing characters with dark skin, believes there is a perception that black people are 'out to get white people'. The conference took place in New York on Thursday and was hosted by agent Gloria Govan. Smith, 53, started his career as a street hustler in the 1980s and recalled the movie Funeral and gangsta culture. It gave those who watched the movie an idea of black people as being aggressive and that they were 'out to get white people'. It gave an impression (of) when they were gangbangin' on the street, they were out to get white people,' he told the Daily Mail. 'It made them paranoid. It made those watching the film think that there's something wrong with black people. 'I was 15 when that movie came out. 'People see black people commit crime, and that's why they're criminals.
